

THE EXECUTIVE LEADERSHIP PROGRAM

a professional development program for community college leaders

sponsored by
NCSU Adult and Higher Education Department

The program

This program is designed to meet the expressed needs of executive level administrators in North Carolina community colleges who seek a professional development experience that broadens and deepens their leadership skills for their current position. Many of these leaders acknowledge the need to continue their professional growth and expand their capacity to lead the academic, student services and administrative units of their colleges. At the same time, they find it difficult to take time away from very demanding jobs in order to attend training events and conferences. They are also conscious of the limited resources their colleges may have for professional development.

Based on information gleaned from a statewide survey and campus visits conducted by faculty in the Adult and Higher Education Department at North Carolina State University, the Executive Leadership Program will provide a one-day on-site seminar followed by a series of online activities focused on some of the topics the survey identified. Time away from campus and program costs are kept at a minimum while offering a highly focused, quality learning experience that is suitable for executive leaders in all units of an institution. New online learning modules are added periodically.

Who should attend

Vice presidents and deans of curriculum, continuing education, student services and administration will find the program of value. Previous participants in the Department Chairs Institute are also invited on a space available basis.

Curriculum areas

Selected topics: strategic thinking, emotional intelligence as a leadership tool, outcomes assessment, coaching for success, ethics in the workplace. Future modules may address topics such as: conducting effective investigations, conflict management, transformational leadership.
